

2009 Japan Martial Arts Association Distinguished Service Award for Aikido
given to Anno Motomichi Sensei, 8th dan, Chief Instructor of Aikido Kumano Juku Dojo in Shingu, Japan

Anno Sensei's essay, published in Aikido Shinbun, February 10, 2009

I am sincerely grateful to receive the Martial Arts Distinguished Service Award from the Japan Martial Arts Association. This is an honor I do not deserve. It is entirely due to the support and guidance I have long received from Doshu and all the members of the Aikido community. For this I express my deepest gratitude.

As I recall, when I began the study of Aikido in 1954, it was a chaotic time. We had not yet emerged from the confusion following the end of the war, and neither the nation nor the people of Japan had a clear goal in mind.

Born in 1931, I had two older brothers, but they fell in the war, and it was only after the war ended that we were informed. I lived with my grieving parents in a quiet farming village. I was always thinking I wanted to study something meaningful, to which I could dedicate myself.

One day, at the paper manufacturing plant where I was employed, I heard that an amazing martial arts teacher was coming from Tokyo to Shingu, and that it was possible to receive direct instruction from him. Without hesitation, I enrolled as a student--of Aikido.

To be honest, at that time I had no knowledge of Aikido, and I had no idea what sort of person the martial arts teacher from Tokyo was. From that time to this day, for over fifty years, I have lived my life following the path of Aikido. The fact that the martial arts teacher from Tokyo was Aikido's founder, Ueshiba Morihei Osensei, brought a sense of purpose and determination to my life.

As you know, the Founder teaches Aikido as the path of kami. In particular, he had a deep reverence for the Kumano kamisama, so he would visit Shingu from time to time. On occasion, he would stay for a longer period and give personal instruction to us young Aikido students.

Currently I am in charge of the Kumano Juku Dojo (in Shingu City, Wakayama Prefecture), having succeeded the former chief instructor, the late Hikitsuchi Michio Sensei. I am applying myself day and night, together with all teachers and students, taking as a "motto" the faithful transmission, to the next generation, of the techniques and spirit conveyed directly by Aikido's Founder.

In conclusion, I would like to express again my gratitude to the Founder Osensei, the second Doshu, the current Doshu, and all teachers and students, offering these words of appreciation as a prayer for the increasing growth and development of Aikido.

--Anno Motomichi Sensei
translated by Linda Holiday